<ul> <li>Introduction</li> <li>The United States was still a young country compared to England, France, and Spain</li> <li>The United States was also relatively undeveloped, with only a small army and half a dozen ships</li> <li>However, the U.S. had large amounts of land</li> </ul>
The Louisiana Purchase  → Americans were moving west for fresh soil and access to the port of New Orleans, which was still owned by Spain → Spain closed the port several times, frustrating and angering the western settlers → Spain had signed a deal to return New Orleans to the French, so James Monroe went to Paris to attempt to buy it for the U.S. → Napoleon was willing to sell all of Louisiana to fund his military expansion → The United States paid $15 million for 828,000 square miles of land → The Constitution did not grant power to buy the land, but President Jefferson believed that it was in the nation's best interest, as the purchase nearly doubled the size of the United States
The War of 1812  The British were kidnapping American sailors to increase their own navy, called impressment  The British also ordered American merchants to not trade certain goods and forbade them from trading in certain ports in Europe  President Jefferson issued an embargo (government order that limits trade in some way) not allowing American ships to trade with any foreign country  The United States declared war on Great Britain in 1812, and the war lasted nearly 3 years  The Battle of New Orleans went badly for the British, as General Andrew Jackson held them off with only 13 casualties, compared to the 2,600 of the British  A treaty was signed in Belgium in December 1814, before the Battle of New Orleans, but news traveled very slowly

Oregon and California  ➤ The British and Americans set a boundary with the Oregon Treaty of 1846 that split the Oregon Territory, giving the northern half to the British in Canada and the southern half to the U.S.  ➤ The borders of the U.S. now extended from the Atlantic to Pacific, manifest destiny had been achieved, and thousands headed west into new territories  ➤ In 1848 gold was discovered in California, and a national stampede west began and mining camps sprung up overnight as 80,000 people rushed to California

<ul> <li>Introduction</li> <li>An increasing number of Americans saw slavery as incompatible with the values of a democratic society</li> <li>Differences in thinking created feelings of sectionalism, and as the country expanded westward, the question of slavery had to be answered</li> <li>Negotiation and compromise were achieved for a period of time, but wouldn't last</li> </ul>
14
The Cotton Gin and the Expansion of Slavery  ➤ Slavery was common in the South where large fields of crops were grown, requiring significant amounts of labor  ➤ Before 1790, producing cotton on a large scale wasn't possible, but the invention of the cotton gin (which removed the seeds from ripe cotton) transformed cotton production in the South  ➤ Now, much of the interior land in the South could grow cotton as a cash crop, and slaves could provide the required labor in the fields  ➤ Textile factories in Britain were becoming more efficient as well, creating the need for more cotton  ➤ By the 1860s, cotton made up 50% of the exports from the U.S. and most of the world's cotton was grown in the southern U.S.
15
Growing Differences on the Question of Slavery
<ul> <li>Many people in northern states were opposed to slavery</li> <li>There was growing support for abolition (the movement to do away with slavery), leading to newspapers like The Liberator and the American Anti-Slavery Society</li> <li>Some abolitionists helped slaves escape to the North through the Underground Railroad, a system of routes and safe houses</li> </ul>
Southern slave owners felt threatened by the anti-slavery movement, believing they needed slavery for their economic system
<ul> <li>The North had begun to industrialize more than the South, leading to growth of towns and cities, and more people working in factories</li> <li>These sectional differences led to differences in laws people in these regions were willing to support</li> </ul>

- The antislavery movement in the North continued to grow stronger in the 1840s
- Northerners began to believe that the government had the right to keep slavery from spreading into new territories, an idea known as free soil The Democratic Party redefined the democratic ideal of popular sovereignty to allow people in new territories to decide issues for themselves, including whether or not to allow slavery

- The U.S. Supreme Court tried to end the arguments about slavery through their decision in the case of Dred Scott and his family
- Dred Scott and heen a slave his entire life and traveled with his owner to free states and territories, where his daughter was born In 1846, Scott sued for his and his family's freedom because they were living in a territory that didn't allow slavery
- The Supreme Court ruled that blacks were not citizens and therefore did not have the right to sue
- The Court also ruled that Congress had never had the right to forbid slavery in territories

<ul> <li>He decided to raid the U.S. government's arsenal (arms storehouse) at Harpers Ferry, Virginia (now West Virginia) to take guns and ammunition, arm the slaves, and start a slave revolt</li> </ul>
<ul> <li>His men were captured or killed, and Brown was convicted of murder, treason, and rebellion</li> </ul>

- Some antislavery northerners saw Brown as a martyr (a person killed for their beliefs)
  White southerners were alarmed, since their greatest fear was a slave revolt
  There was no one event that created the sectionalism of the Antebellum U.S. and eventually negotiation and compromise failed, and sectionalism propelled the country into its bloodiest war
